Toys for Tots program kicks off

Pfc. Ricardo Branch

Associate Editor

With the Christmas season in full swing, the Fort Stewart community is lending their support to help make the gift giving season a good time for needy children in Liberty County with donations to the Toys for Tots program.

The Toys for Tots program will be collecting gifts and donations at the Post Exchange until Dec. 10.

"It's Christmas time," said Donna Smith, Fort Stewart resident. "It's important to give to those needy to help make this holiday season better for them."

According to the Toys for Tots Website, the program is aimed at collecting new, unwrapped toys during the months of October, November and December each year and distributing those toys as Christmas gifts to needy children in the community where the campaign is conducted.

"Families can sometimes run into financial problems. The holidays can put added problems to that, but by reaching in our pockets and helping out, the families and children can enjoy the holidays," said Angela Powell, coordinator for Liberty County Toys for Tots program.

The program is geared toward helping children to experience the joy of Christmas and hopefully motivate them to grow into productive and responsible adults.

"One of the first presents I can remember getting was through the Toys for Tots program, which is why I'm here donating my time for a good cause," said Luis Carrera, logistics contractor with the Fort Stewart Department of Labor maintenance division.

"It's important to remember that children are so vital to the future of this country," he said. "So it's important to donate because every child deserves a Christmas."

Carrera is an avid supporter of the Liberty County Toys for Tots program and, in support, dresses as Santa Claus at the PX during collection for the program.

The Fort Stewart chaplains, coordinating with the units in Stewart, are also helping by collecting donations and distributing flyers to the families on the installation to bring in even more for the Toys for Tots program.

"We're helping out by informing the Soldiers and units to bring in their gifts and donations to Victory Chapel to give to those in need this holiday season," said Chaplain (Maj.) Timothy Sowers, family life chaplain.

Toys for Tots is a non-profit organization that originated in 1947 when Maj. Bill Hendricks, United States Marine Corps Reserve and a group of other Reservists collected and distributed 5,000 toys to needy children. The campaign was so successful it became a nationwide campaign the next year and was named Toys for Tots.

Sowers said, "It's a blessing really, to help out and contribute to something positive that can touch the lives of families on Fort Stewart and the community is what the Christmas spirit is all about."

Holiday Family Talent Show free for civilian, military families

Nancy Gould

MWR Marketing

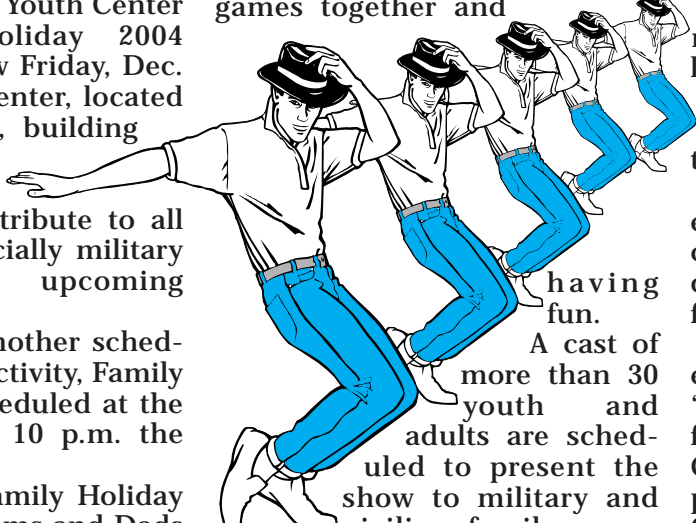

The Fort Stewart Youth Center presents the Holiday 2004 Family Talent Show Friday, Dec. 17, 7 p.m. at the center, located at 946 Austin Rd., building 7338.

The free special performance is a tribute to all families, but especially military families facing upcoming deployment.

It is a part of another scheduled deployment activity, Family Holiday Night, scheduled at the center, from 7 to 10 p.m. the same night.

The intent of Family Holiday Night is to give Moms and Dads an opportunity to devote exclusive time to their kids— watching the talent show, playing games together and having fun.

A cast of more than 30 youth and adults are scheduled to present the show to military and civilian family members, according to Linda Schumm, a training and program specialist at the center.

Performances include dance, rap, songs, ballet, guitar and keyboard pieces, poetry readings and special performances by the Youth Center Dancers and the teen rock band, "Meer."

The event is billed as a talent exhibition instead of a talent competition, even though students and adults had to audition for the show.

"This is really a morale booster for everyone," said Schumm. "We recruited youth performers from our Fort Stewart Youth Center program and from off-post agencies, such as the YMCA. Over the years, we've established networks with local agencies and they let us recruit from their programs because it gives their kids an opportunity to showcase their talent."

Rehearsals were held in November and are scheduled in December before the event. Volunteer Karen Jordan, from Barber Shop AAFES, serves as event coordinator.

She's a songwriter and vocalist with a history in performing arts and will also perform in the show.

D&J Urban Wear is also an event supporter.

For more information about the show or about Family Holiday Night activities, contact Schumm at 767-4493.

Military couples share stories of commitment

Sgt. 1st Class Tammy M. Jarrett

Army News Service

WASHINGTON, D.C. — She dreamed of a big church wedding complete with a white gown, fancy cake, and lots of family and friends sharing her special moment.

But when that day came, there was no crowd, no church or three-tier cake, just Wendy Quigley in her homemade blue corduroy dress, her husband-to-be and the Justice of the Peace.

Now, after 23 years of marriage and three children, Wendy Lewis finally got her fair-tale wedding as she, her husband, Larry, and 17 other military couples said "I do" all over again during "Good Morning America's" vow renewal special Nov. 18 in New York City's Hammerstein Ballroom. In all, 125 couples participated in the morning show extravaganza.

This time, Wendy wore a custom-made blush pink gown with antic French ivory lace and two-inch drop sleeves by designer Tomasina. Larry, a command sergeant major stationed at Fort Hood, Texas but deployed to Iraq, wore dress blues, complete with the 3rd Cavalry hat.

"I literally got goose bumps on my back when I put it on and of course I instantly came to tears," she said, referring to when Bride's magazine and Tomasina surprised her with the dress being made so soon. "The experience of making my own dress and having a dress made for me, the comparison is just incredible."

The Lewis' were also one of the couples profiled on GMA during the week of Nov. 15. Lewis, who wasn't scheduled to come home on R&R until Nov. 18, flew in early to surprise his wife on national television. She truly deserved this, he said. "Being able to experience the whole feeling of renewing our vows...it's just phenomenal, something she well deserved," said Lewis.

Wendy was only 17 when her sweetheart, Larry, a 20-year-old Army recruit, proposed to her. They had little money, but were deeply in love and wanted to get married not matter what, so they headed to the local courthouse Nov. 21, 1980.

But when they arrive the courthouse was closed. "We didn't realize there were no cars parked around and we said 'gosh nobody's around, what were we thinking?' So we put our rings on, went back to my sister's house, told her and his mom we were not married, but everyone else thought we were," said Wendy. "We went back two days later and got married."

Marriage not approved by parents

Although the Lewis' wedding was blessed by their families, that was not the case, at first, for Chief Warrant Officer 3 Hector Echevarria and his wife, Rebecca, who also renewed their vows of 12 years of marriage.

The couple were high school sweethearts and continued to date while Echevarria attended college. He later joined the Army Reserve to help pay for his college and went to basic training.

"We talked to both parents but they were not supportive because they had expectations, he was in college and I was only a senior," said Rebecca.

So the two eloped on April Fool's Day and two months later their daughter, Mariah, was born.

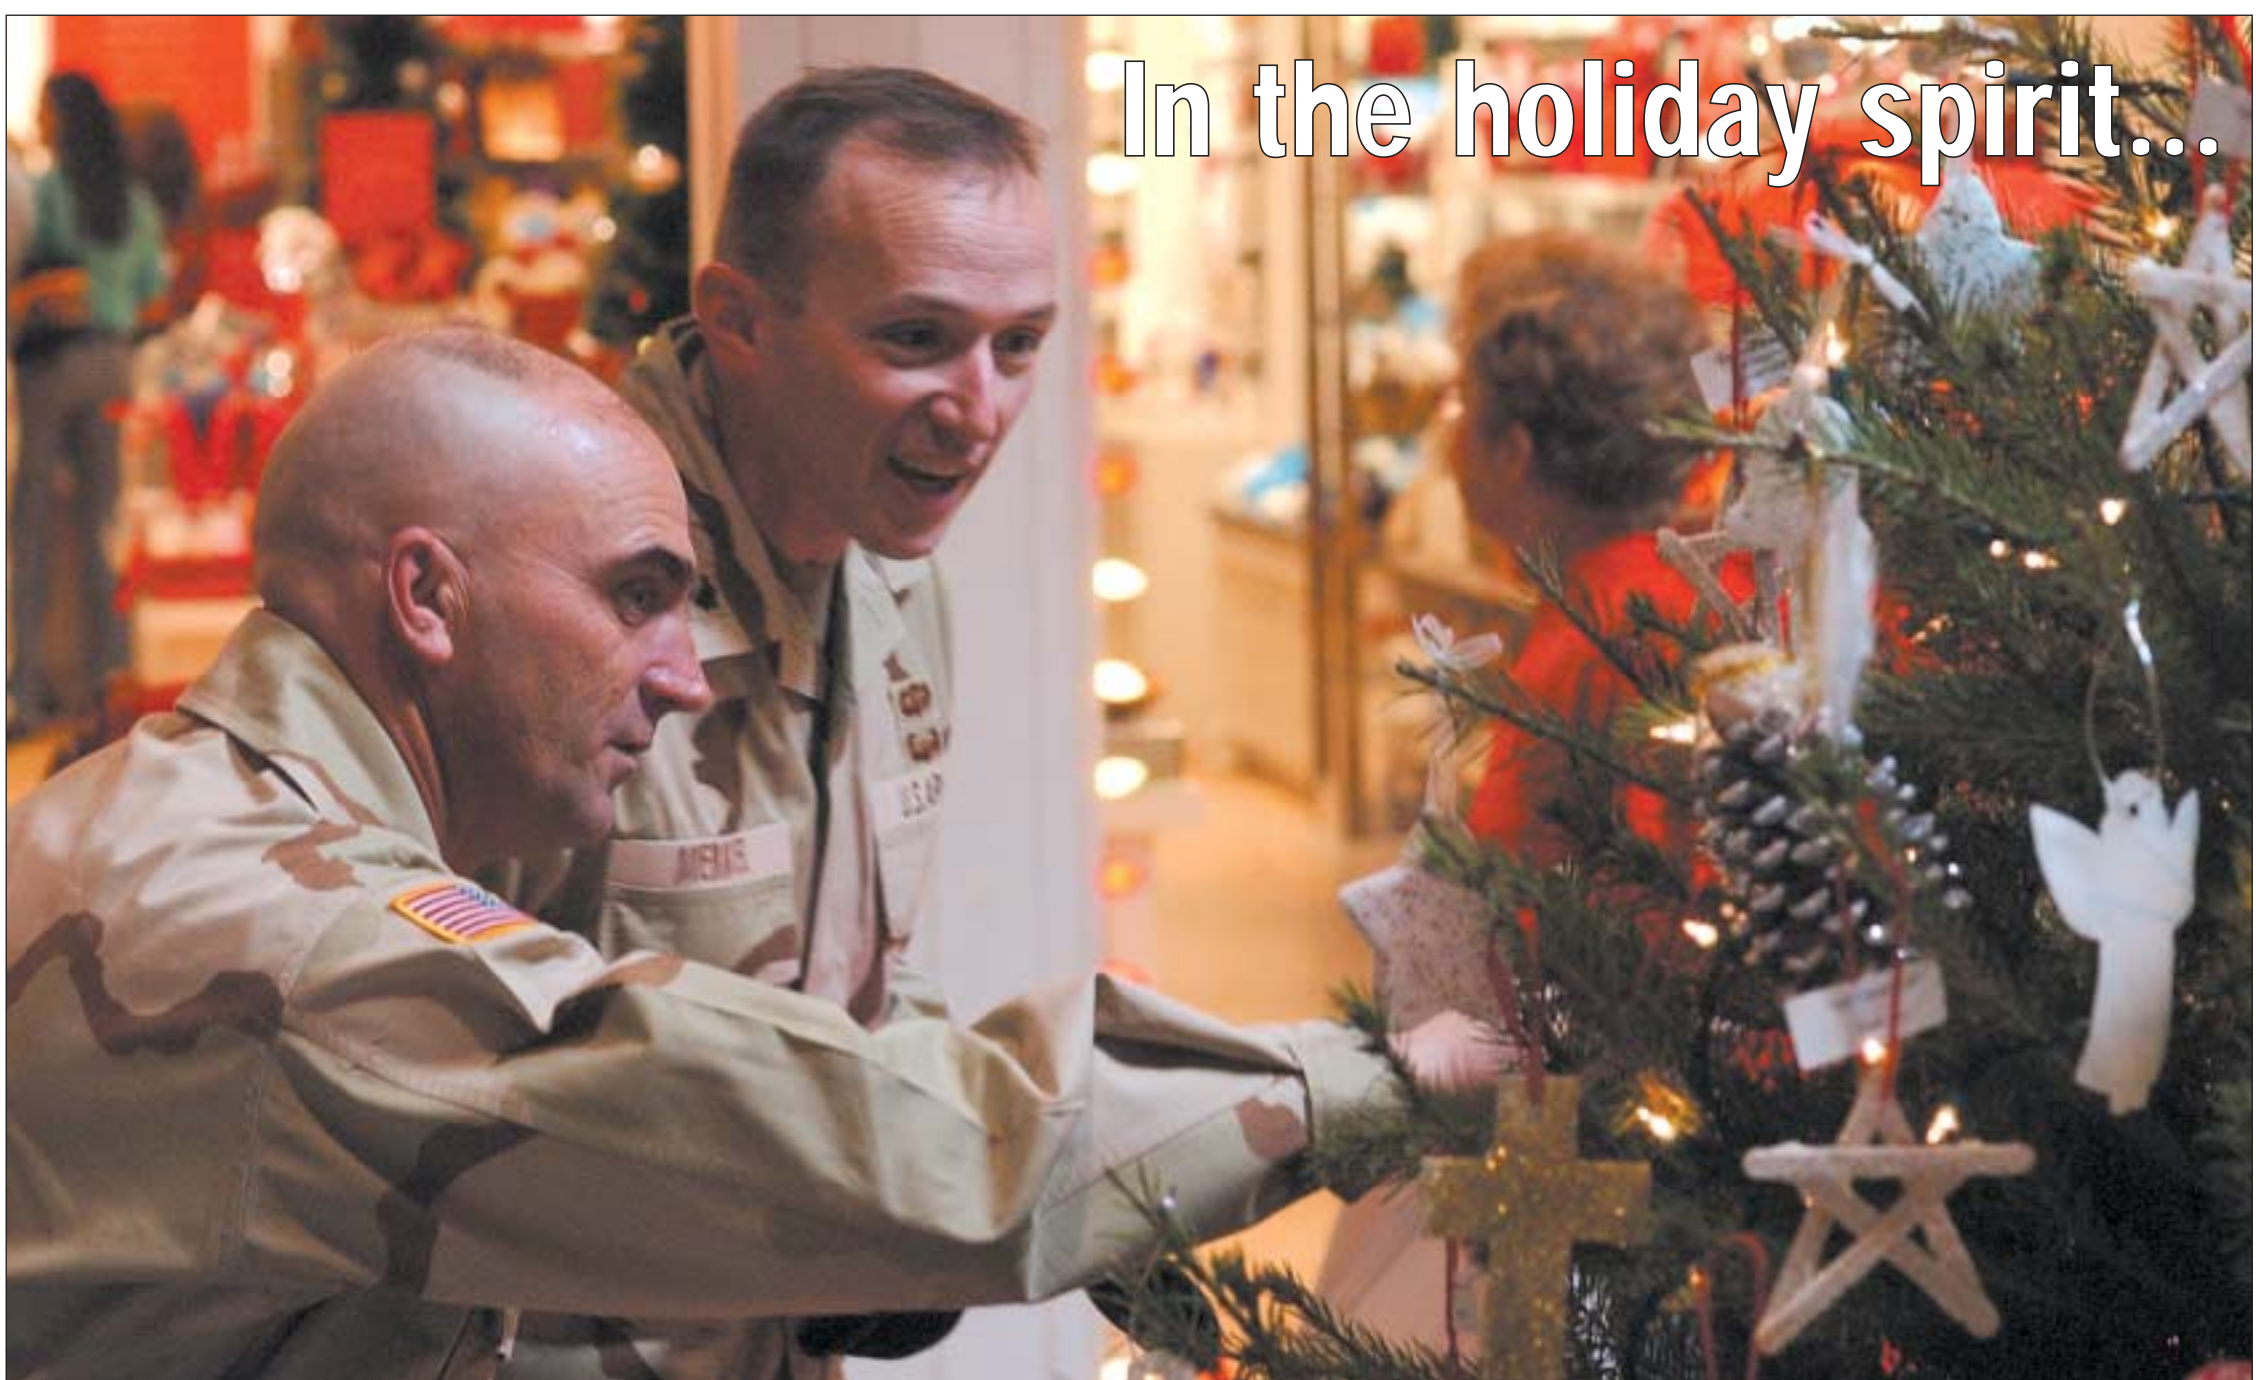

"The attitudes of the our families have changed. They love her. I think my family likes Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 9th Field Artillery Regiment have supported two Girl Scout projects this month, helping net food for the hungry and funds for local schools.

The First Annual Festival of Trees was held Saturday at Statesboro Mall, and 1/9 commander Lt. Col. Steven Merkel and 1/9 Command Sgt. Maj. Tony Smith acted as judges in the Christmas tree competi-

The event was put on by members of Statesboro Girl Scout Cadet Troop 070 to benefit local schools that decorated the trees. The trees are part of a silent auction currently taking place at the mall.

Troop 070 and the Battlekings are not strangers — during the unit's last deployment to Iraq, Troop 070 raised money to send cookies to the Soldiers there.

"We got local businesses to buy a case of cookies, then we'd send it to Iraq," said Spencer Dutton, an energetic member of Troop 070. "We found out quickly that you can't send chocolate cookies to Iraq because they melt."

After pacing around the dozen or so trees, Merkel, Smith and WTOC co-anchor Jody Chapin declared Trinity Christian School the winner.

The troop put on the show as part of their drive toward the Silver Award, which is the highest honor in Girl Scout Cadets, according to Dutton.

"It's been fun making this happen," said Cassie Barber of Troop 070. "It's been a lot of work, but it's definitely worth it."

Battlekings honored Girl Scout Bianca Browning Nov. 17 for her efforts coordinating a food drive with the battalion.

About 1,500 boxes and can of food filled the backs of two pickup trucks for distribution to food banks in Hinesville.

Browning is working toward her Bronze Award with the project, and says she likes helping the community.

Merkel and Smith presented her with a Battlekings coin, the first they have given to a civilian.

"You show the same dedication and selfless service that I expect from my Soldiers," Merkel said as he "coined" Browning. "Thank you for your hard work."

her more than they like me,” laughed the Blackhawk pilot assigned to B Company, 4th Battalion, 3rd Aviation at Fort Stewart, Ga.

Although they have had some tough times financially, especially at the beginning of their marriage, Echevarria said love is what brought them through. “We have a lot of love in our family,” he said. “Our daughter -- we really love her to death and I think that is what helped us push through, that and God.”

Trust in faith and each other
Faith is also the reason Sgt. 1st Class Mark Fitzgerald and his wife, Cindy are still crazy about each other after 25 years of marriage. “We have a lot of faith in God,” Cindy said. “Faith in God, Faith in Jesus and faith in each other.”

The couple has known one another since they were 14 and 12. They married at the age of 18 and 16 and began their journey of raising his 2-year-old niece and their two children, while dealing with the pressures of the military.

The couple had planned to renew their vows for their 25th wedding anniversary March 7, but when his unit leaders saw an e-mail about the GMA show, they suggested he submit an entry form, said Fitzgerald, who is stationed at Fort Bragg.

“We thank the unit for that...being selected is also a great honor to go and do the thing we wanted to do the same time the unit was supporting us...we are just grateful,” he said.

Couple sets example for children
Lt. Col. Fred Wellman and wife, Crystal, also had been thinking about renewing their vows since they tied the knot Dec. 22, 1995. Then the GMA announcement came through the command channels at Fort Campbell, Ky. As they were filling out the application, they realized “we had never been away from our children for more than three days in about nine years,” said Wellman, the deputy public affairs officer for the 101st Airborne Division. Wellman, who was deployed to Iraq last year and is going again this year, said it was important to renew their vows.

“With everything going on, we just thought it was the opportunity to reaffirm what we stand for,” he said.

They also believe in leading by example, especially with four children. “A good family rests on a good marriage so we think it’s [wedding renewal ceremony] a good opportunity to keep that foundation strong,” he said as his wife wholeheartedly agreed with him.

The couple regularly goes on dates to help foster the relationship and keep the communication lines open.

“It doesn’t matter what we do as long as we’re together,” said Crystal. “Having our relationship is the most important key we focus on.”

But dating or even wanting to be with each other was not the case for one military couple when they began their courtship.

Persistence pays off for GI
Sgt. 1st Class Kenneth Whited was just a young Soldier stationed at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., when his wife-to-be caught his eye. He was repelling off of an 120 foot cliff when she and the neighborhood boys she were watching stopped to observe.

“I didn’t want to stay but the boys wanted to stay and watch,” said Tonya, “and he kept talking to me and I was real stand offish. He asked ‘what do you do for fun around here and I said I go roller skating,’” she said smiling.

Whited found the local skating rink and even left a note on her car to call him. “I said ‘I’m not calling GIs, no way,’” said Tonya, who was 19 at the time. And after four months, he asked her to marry him. She said she knew he was serious when he wanted to take her and her 2-year-old son to meet his parents. Three months later, they married. Now 15 years and three children later, they’re still madly in love, even with the frequent deployments.

“We’re always telling each other that we love each other and being there for one another because he deploys a lot,” she said. “It helps the relationship...when he comes back, there is always something new.”

No matter what the reason behind the couples getting married or how it came about, one thing they all agreed on was that renewing their vows was well worth it.

“After all the sacrifices, we’ve gone through with raising the kids and other sacrifices,” said Fitzgerald, “this is like payback.”

CHAPLAIN'S CORNER

First Sunday of Advent — "A"

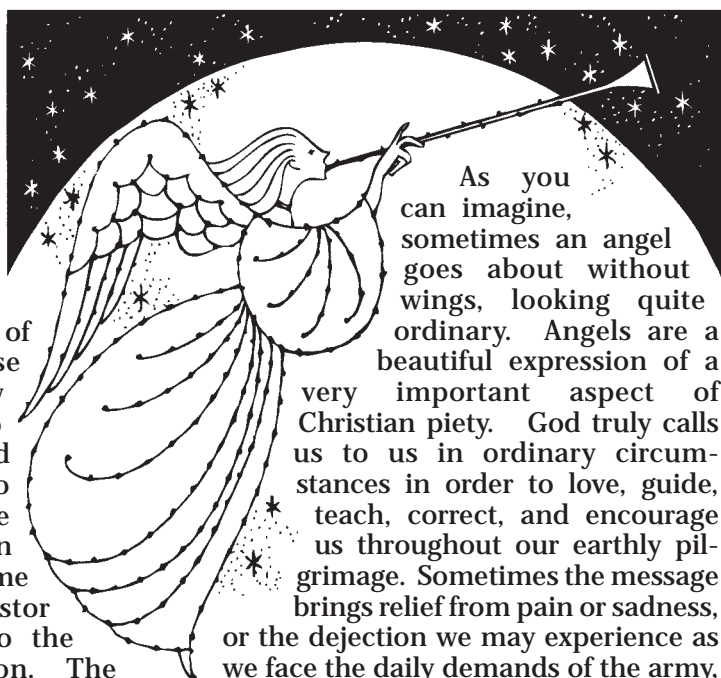

Chaplain (Capt.) Timothy Valentine
STB, 31D Chaplain

Once upon a time a pastor was walking through his church at the end of the day, turning out lights, locking doors and securing windows. The last few worshippers had left just moments ago, but as he was still some distance from the back of the church, he noticed a figure emerging from the shadows in back of one of the pillars, coming straight toward him. The appearance of the figure became progressively brighter with each step, and to his amazement, he was suddenly aware of a pair of brilliant wings. These unfolded so as to allow the mysterious visitor to glide gracefully toward the startled man, who finally realized that he was in the presence of an angel. When the two came face to face, the pastor timidly inquired as to the nature of this visitation. The angel announced that the Lord Jesus was just outside the church doors and was about to enter. "What should I do?" asked the pastor, clearly unnerved. The angel paused, smiled, and drew close to his ear and softly replied, "Well, if I were you, I'd grab a broom and look busy!"

During the Christmas season, one sees angels everywhere: in the newspapers, on the television, in the mall, on people's lawns. We do well to ask: What exactly is an angel? The word itself comes from a Greek term meaning "messenger." Beyond this, the answer often trails off into obscurity.

The great St. Augustine offered this explanation: "'Angel' is the name of their office, not of their nature. If you seek the name of their nature, it is 'spirit'; if you seek the name of their office, it is 'angel': from what they are, 'spirit,' from what they do, 'angel.'" That is to say, an angel is a spiritual being who serves God as his messenger. While we normally think of these as creatures who have no physical bodies, what they do is actually more important than what they are. Indeed, each of us has probably encountered an angel of sorts delivering God's message: the words of discipline spoken by a loving parent, the words of consolation offered by a friend, the words of wisdom voiced by a favorite teacher, the words of devotion uttered by a spouse.

As you can imagine, sometimes an angel goes about without wings, looking quite ordinary. Angels are a beautiful expression of a very important aspect of Christian piety. God truly calls us to us in ordinary circumstances in order to love, guide, teach, correct, and encourage us throughout our earthly pilgrimage. Sometimes the message brings relief from pain or sadness, or the dejection we may experience as we face the daily demands of the army, school, work, or family life. Other times, it serves to shock us out of complacency, to disturb our consciences, to confound our attempts to give easy answers to difficult questions.

In Advent, we hear the voices of many heralds of God's Kingdom. One of these was the prophet Isaiah, who preached in Jerusalem during the eighth century before Christ. The message of Isaiah is one that challenges Christians to live in joyful expectation of the Kingdom of God, and live accordingly, through lives of dedication and generosity to our brothers and sisters, particularly those who are in need. For people of faith,

Christmas is not merely the celebration of a birthday, however special. It only makes sense for us to look back in time to the events surrounding the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem if we have a sense of direction for where we are going. What is it, then, that we await in the age to come? Isaiah lived, as we do today, at a time of tremendous upheaval. The kingdom of David was by now a divided one, with the northern kingdom of Israel defeated by a foreign power, and the southern kingdom itself on the brink of destruction. The people had essentially forsaken their covenant with the Lord. Having rejected the Law, which gave the nation life and purpose, each individual chose to follow his own designs. Such a plan could not help but lead to conflict, immorality, and bloodshed.

The message of Isaiah, however, calls people to something very different. "In days to come," he says, people from every land and way of life will stream to the mountain of the Lord. They will be taught by God himself, and will see the weapons of destruction transformed into tools for peace and prosperity. God alone will judge disputes, and all people will live in right relationship to one another.

In short, we have before us a vision of the end of time, of the Kingdom of Heaven. On the one hand, there is nothing we can do to stop its progress, or force it, for that matter. It is, from first to last, the work of God. We should keep this in mind as we see the situation in Iraq unfold.

According to the Scriptures, human ingenuity, no matter how resourceful, is no substitute for the true peace that only God can give, and no matter how good our intentions, no matter how hard we try, our solutions to the problems afflicting our world will inevitably be provisional. On the other hand, if through grace we are seized by the Kingdom of God, then our attitude, our perspective, our very behavior will be radically changed. St. Paul writes in his letter to the Romans that we must live honorably and peacefully, as if Christ were right outside our door, about to come into our hearts and homes. God helps us attack the roots of suffering in the world, remaking it in the image of the world to come. Still, the arrival of the Kingdom will be unexpected, and we are not allowed to grow slack in our efforts.

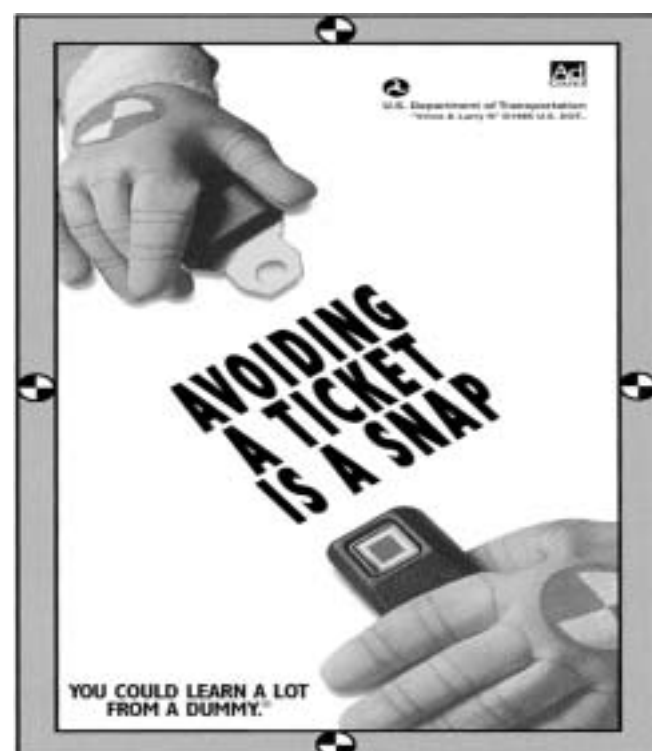

Advent is a special time at the beginning of the Church's liturgical year, to hear the voice of the angels announcing the Lord. Let us make our own the vision of Isaiah, who prophesies reconciliation between enemies, and life for those who walk in the light of the Lord.
